What do voters want from an online voting experience?

Results from user testing of a prototype i-voting app

Dr Manu Savani | Brunel University London

Professor Justin Fisher | Brunel University London

Dr Fotios Spyridonis | Brunel University London

Executive Summary

The results of the user testing of the i-voting app show that voters would like to see i-voting offered remotely online (i-voting) in the future alongside traditional voting methods. The app was positively evaluated and voters gave an average score of 8.4 out of 10. The most commonly mentioned advantages of i-voting were convenience, ease of use, simplicity and accessibility. Security and privacy concerns were also mentioned as disadvantages. Two thirds of voters said they would opt for i-voting if it were available.

- The i-voting app was positively evaluated, with voters giving an average score of 8.4 out of 10. The most commonly mentioned advantages of i-voting were convenience, ease of use, simplicity and accessibility.
- Convenience, ease of use, simplicity and accessibility were repeatedly mentioned as advantages of i-voting. Security and privacy concerns were also mentioned as disadvantages.
- Two thirds say they would opt for 'i-voting' if it were available.
- The app gave an average score of 8.4.

Design choices for the prototype app

The web app prototype was implemented in the Axure RP software. It includes a monochromatic colour scheme for the main content, which is on par with a typical ballot paper, and the "#00823B $button-colour" for the colour of the buttons adopted from the GOV.UK colour palette. The typography used is of type 'Sans Serif'. It further includes a responsive web interface that allowed us to test our design features on the three different devices. We adopted and then scaled up to the larger screens of a tablet and a desktop. However, we made a deliberate choice not to scale up the interface, but instead keep it on par with a typical ballot paper for familiarity.
